Undoubtedly the opening of the struggle will see the adherents of the asc-salled old will, the one of 1909, aligned with Prince Kuhlo's end of the fight, in an attack on the "new will' of 1917, which was brought in-der fire in the recent preliminary pro-ceedings. If the efforts of the two groups succeed, a second stag of the struggle will come with a clash be-twen the supporters of the 1909 will and Prince Kuhlo's forces. Photographing Documents

The work of photographing all the important documents in the case continued yesterday under the direction of Harry A. Wilder, clerk of Judge Ashford's court. This was ordered by the court so the possible disappearance of any of the documents would not af-fect the case.

Preceding the signature to the 1917 will, said to have been signed by the Queen August, 29, the latest signature so far presented in courf appears in a book, "Hawaii By Hawaii's Queen." The book, according to testimony given by Mrs. Lahilahi Webb at the recent hearing, was presented to her by the Queen March 31 last. Mrs. Webb testified that she saw the Queen write the signature in the book. The page with the signature will be among the photographs. The writing of this signature is shaky and almost ellegible, differing entirely in this respect from the signature which appears on the various pages of the 1917 will. Question Cleared Up
